Chamber Names Recipients at 2016 Awards Breakfast

The Gettysburg Adams Chamber of Commerce held its Awards Breakfast on May 10th at the Hanover Country Club and named the recipients of three of its annual awards. Awards presented were the Educator of the Year, Environmental Stewardship and Small Business Persons of the Year. "The citizens and businesses in our area give so much back to the county," said Gettysburg Adams Chamber of Commerce President Carrie Stuart. "We are so very proud to be able to honor a few of the most outstanding examples this year."

The Awards committee selected Kevin Thomas, Principal at New Oxford High School, as the 2016 Educator of the Year. For nearly 30 years, Thomas has been an administrator, teacher, coach and role model in Adams County. After graduating from Messiah College, Thomas began his career at Cumberland Valley Middle School, continued his journey with a Masters from McDaniel College, and moved to the Gettysburg Middle School. He then took the Assistant Principal position at New Oxford High School and was selected to be the Principal in 2010. Thomas has a passion for teaching and leading which is evidenced in his relationship with students in and out of the classroom. Throughout his career, Thomas coached track and girls and boys basketball. He led students to be their best through positive reinforcement and leading by example. To quote from his nomination form, "Kevin is a humble man, he is a true leader in our community. He has blazed untold paths in Adams County over the years, quietly doing great things for the youth in Adams County." The chamber is privileged to honor Kevin Thomas as the 2016 Educator of the Year.

Charlie Bennett, chair of the Environmental Committee of the chamber, presented the 2016 Environmental Stewardship to Kathy Gilbert, owner of Gettysburg Day Spa. The salon partnered with Green Circle Salons enabling them to recycle hair clippings into oil spill clean-up booms, metals from color tubes and hair foils into other reusable aluminum products, and chemical residue into new sources of energy. But the efforts don't stop there. Appliances are unplugged and water heaters turned off at the end of the work day and containers and other supplies are collected and recycled locally. Even the front desk team work with guests to inform them of the processes employees follow on a daily basis to achieve sustainability as a business. Keeping their environmental footprint small is a team effort at Gettysburg Day Spa with policies in place to recycle even when the local municipalities may not require recycling. Additionally, Gilbert is hoping to inspire other salons in the area to improve not only the beauty of their clients but that of the planet at the same time. They welcome other salons to tour the spa and see how they make this program work. Gilbert states, "We will continue to work towards recycling and reuse efforts. As a small business, we know that our numbers may be small, but each of us can work toward a common goal of keeping our environment beautiful and clean for future generations." Gettysburg Day Spa is an excellent example of how small businesses and their leaders have a big effect not only locally but globally.

The Small Business Person of the Year Award was awarded to a team this year, Henry Grossman and Steve Quinley of TREYSTA technology management. Their partnership began in 2014 when they joined two successful businesses together to form one central IT solutions company. Despite challenges with moving to a new innovative thought process of an MSP

TREYSTA constantly monitors customers' information and systems to increase efficiency, decrease or eliminate downtime, and make the most effective use of their resources while keeping the client on the cutting edge of technology and safeguarding their information. This vision has been the catalyst for rapid growth, enough to necessitate their relocation to new office space in 2016. Grossman and Quinley's progressive business formula extends to their interaction with employees as well as the community. This is written into company policies with an emphasis placed on family time as well as encouraging employees to be active in community events. Along with donating money, they actively participate with time and enthusiasm for many local charity or non-profit events; Easter Seals, YWCA of Gettysburg, Adams County Children's Advocacy Center and Big Brothers Big Sisters to name just a few. At the Awards Breakfast, Commissioner Qually remarked that "It is businesses like TREYSTA technology management that will enable Adams County to not only survive but have an influence on the community to prosper in the future."

Destination Gettysburg Unveils New Marketing Initiative

Destination Gettysburg, the official destination management organization of Adams County, PA, unveiled this month a new marketing initiative aimed to highlight the stories of Adams County, PA. The initiative provides visitors to the region a wider variety of experiences and interest travelers into staying longer.

Increasingly, visitors to the Gettysburg region are looking to the destination to reconnect, slow down and appreciate the authenticity of its "sense of place."

This new project, titled "Authentic Adams County," will feature the people, places and landscape that make Adams County unique and special to both visitors and local residents. These stories will be largely told through video, blogging and social media and highlight farmers, craftsmen, chefs, historians and others in the community to share their passion for the region as a way to draw visitors into a more robust experience, extending their stay.

Authentic Adams County's first story – told through video – is that of Beau Ramsburg, a Gettysburg area farmer who partners with several restaurants throughout the region in providing food for their menus. The video also featured Chef Josh Fidler of Fidler & Co. Craft Kitchen in Biglerville, Pa., and both shared their passion for working together and with locally produced food for their customers.

Authentic Adams County's stories may be found at www.authenticadamscounty.com.
