MEMBER SPOTLIGHT

Adams County Library System

Miranda Wisor, Executive Director

717.334.5716 | miranda2@adamslibrary.org

Let's meet Miranda Wisor with the Adams County Library System!

Miranda Wisor may be new to her position of Executive Director of the Adams County Library System, but she is no stranger to working within libraries. After graduating from Gettysburg College, where she started her career working in Musselman Library, she moved on to work in a library system with 17 libraries in Oklahoma and then moved to Virginia to be the System Director for a two county library system.

"My family has ties to Adams County. I started my career here. My husband and I started our family here," Wisor said, "So working at the Adams County Library System feels like coming full circle."

Growing up, Wisor always had a passion for reading, saying that her family would go to book stores and spend a lot of money instead of going to the toy store. It wasn't until she was an adult that she learned all the other possibilities a public library had to offer. "It seemed like the greatest cost savings in the world," Wisor said.

Along with the cost savings, the library system offers up a variety of programs and resources for the public. Wisor described the Adams County Library System as a community cultural center offering tons of programs at all six locations for people of all ages.

"Anything from story time for babies and toddlers through teen programming and adult lectures series," Wisor expanded. "We have a plethora of personal and educational growth opportunities and resources."

The best part is that all of this is available to the whole community, all you need is a free Adams County Library System Card. Being a free resource opens the library up to serve as an engagement point for people to connect to other people and for the community to come together.

Part of that community connection is the library working with other local nonprofits to better serve Adams County. One of Wisor's favorite partnership programs is the Living Library with the YWCA Gettysburg.

"It is such a neat concept to sit down one-on-one with another person and to hear about their life experiences, someone you may never have talked to before and may never talk to again," she said.

Wisor is thankful for the opportunity to have worked in a lot of different libraries. She is proud that it is a profession that genuinely wants to help and support the communities that they are a part of.

What makes Adams County such a great place to be a part of?

Of all of the places I've lived, Adams County has by far the most amount of people who care about making where they live a good place to live. A lot of people in Adams County are willing to give of their time and talents to make sure that this is a positive and nice place to live.

BIZ BUZZ

It's been nearly 75 years since Adams County's first public library opened and their mission remains the same: to provide residents with materials and information services for formal and lifelong learning, enrichment and pleasure. With six locations, they provide information, access to new technologies, space for creation and collaboration, and enhanced programs for learning and exploration.

EDUCATION BUDGET BILL ADVANCES, WOULD WEAKEN SCHOOL CHOICE

PA STATE REPRESENTATIVE DAN MOUL

With the June 30 state budget deadline just a few weeks away, the halls and hearing rooms of the state Capitol and the House and Senate chambers are buzzing with activity, and legislation expected to be part of the annual budget is starting to move.

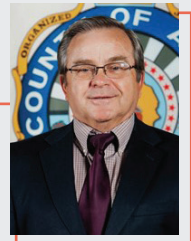

Education funding accounts for more than one-third of total annual state spending. Each year, there is a struggle in the General Assembly to ensure education dollars are spent on educating our children, not creating new programs, padding salaries or propping up the state teachers' union.

The basic education funding bill before us does nothing to fix our failing education system or to support school choice. In fact, it cuts funding for cyber charter schools, which provides a lifeline to students in failing school districts. Parents should not have to send their children to failing schools, but funding cuts could force some cyber charters out of business, leaving parents with few or no options. The school funding proposal also neglects rural counties like Adams, which have smaller school districts and even smaller tax bases to make up for funding losses.

House Bill 2370 was recently approved in the House by a vote of 107-94, largely along party lines, and is now under consideration in the state Senate. I voted "no" on this bill for its $1.1 billion annual price tag and for the many things it fails to provide.

SOLAR GROWTH

ADAMS COUNTY COMMISSIONER JIM MARTIN

As industrial solar ground arrays capture more and more of Adams County acreage, what effects will it have upon the county's two leading industries, tourism and agriculture? Land captured for industrial solar is an allowable land use under Pennsylvania municipal code. The question to be answered is, how much land can be committed to industrial solar and not negatively affect tourism and agriculture, let alone affect the neighbors bordering the array?

From my perspective, depending on the location of the installation, the view shed is dramatically affected if in a scenic area. Many tourists return and come to Adams County because its scenic rural character adds to the enjoyment of their visit. Will the continued growth of industrial solar arrays be an enjoyable tourist attraction? How will industrial solar arrays among preserved farmland enhance the scenic character of that area? I believe that the answer to the cumulative growth of solar is, it will adversely affect the health of our tourism industry.

It will present challenges for neighboring property owners: enhanced flooding, glare, loss of property values, noise, and soil and water contamination presence from damaged panels leaking toxic materials.

Industrial solar eliminates land from agricultural production. Associated industries are supported by the commodities produced on Adams County acreage. For example, CXS railroad traffic through Adams County exists primarily because of hauling agricultural products.

Industrial solar can only happen through governmental subsidies which Governor Shapiro has recently increased to incentivize more industrial solar. Is this what Adams County needs?

CYBERSECURITY IS NOT JUST IT'S RESPONSIBILITY ALONE

Written by Shannon McCleary, TREYSTA Marketing & Account Manager

You're a small or medium sized business owner with an IT department. Wonderful! Maybe it's in-house support or maybe you've chosen to outsource. You've done your job, right? All cybersecurity responsibilities are solely their department now.

Unfortunately, many people think it's just the IT department's job, but that's far from the truth. Keeping an organization safe from cyber threats is everyone's responsibility. Let's learn why.

First, let's consider the kinds of threats we're dealing with. Cyber criminals often target human weaknesses more than technical ones. Think about phishing attacks. These are scams where attackers send deceptive emails to trick people into giving away personal information. If employees aren't aware of these tactics, they might fall for them and compromise their whole organization's security. This is why everyone needs to be educated about cybersecurity. It's not just about having strong firewalls; it's about knowing how to spot and avoid potential threats.

Next, think about the impact of a cyberattack. It's not just the IT department that suffers; the whole organization feels the pain. A successful attack can disrupt business operations, damage the company's reputation, and lead to significant financial losses. Imagine if customer data gets stolen. Not only would that hurt trust, but it could also lead to legal troubles. This means that senior management must be actively involved in cybersecurity. They need to make sure the right resources are in place and that everyone is following best practices.

Cybersecurity also overlaps with everyday business operations. Different departments handle sensitive information and use various technologies. For example, the finance team deals with transactions, HR manages personal data, and sales have access to customer information. Each department needs to follow data protection best practices and comply with security protocols. When everyone plays their part, it helps build a strong defense against cyber threats.

With the rise of remote work and mobile devices, the lines of IT security are more blurred than ever.

Employees working from home or on the go might use personal devices and unsecured networks, which can increase the risk of attacks. It's crucial for everyone to follow security guidelines, such as avoiding public Wi-Fi for work.

Lastly, let's remember that cybersecurity is always evolving. New threats emerge all the time, and staying ahead of them requires continuous learning and adaptation. While the IT department is key in implementing and managing security technologies, they can't do it alone. Regular training and staying updated on new threats are vital. Everyone needs to be informed and prepared to handle cybersecurity challenges.

In short, cybersecurity isn't just the IT department's job. It's a shared responsibility that involves everyone in the organization. By staying aware, getting employees involved, and integrating security into daily operations, we can all help protect our digital assets. So, let's work together to keep our information safe!
